Traditionally most Javanese people are farmers. Farming is especially common because of the fertile volcanic soil in Java. The most important agricultural commodity is rice. In 1997 it was estimated that Java produced 55% of Indonesia’s total output of the crop.

The Religion of Java will interest specialists in Southeast Asia anthropologists and sociologists concerned with the social analysis of religious belief and ideology students of comparative religion and civil servants dealing with governmental policy toward Indonesia and Southeast Asia.

While the majority of the people of Java are Muslim, Java’s population comprises people of diverse religious beliefs, ethnicities, and cultures. Java is divided into four administrative provinces: West Java, Central Java, East Java, and Banten, and two special regions: Jakarta and Yogyakarta.

A wide-ranging look at the fascinatingly diverse syncretic melange of religion in Java. Inevitably, the most interesting part to me was at the beginning about the folk religion Geertz calls the abangan strain. Later chapters on the santri, more self-consciously Muslim strain which is as much about political party organization as religious practice and prijaji aristocratic mystic.

As a new religion, Islam initially influenced the port towns and harbor states of Java’s north coast which subsequently became prosperous and powerful and undermined the declining power of the Majapahit empire of East Java.
